Questions for Discussion: The task of panel four is to focus, in light of the prior discussion of the hypotheticals, on the broader implications of using these tests in the courtroom. These implications may be for the legal system, medical treatment or research, and/or society more generally and how we view genetic testing and its significance. During the panel, we would like you to first react to the points we make in pages 153 – 161 of our article. In addition, we’d like you to consider the following questions:

1. What other implications should be considered?

2. What changes in public policy, if any, should be made to address concerns raised by the possibility of expanding the use of these tests in the courtroom?

3. What future research questions should be addressed to better inform future public policy?
