SEEKING COMMON GROUND WHILE KEEPING DIFFERENCES: “USING THE CASE OF CROSS-STRAIT RELATIONS AS A CASE”

Charles Chong-han Wu*

TABLE OF CONTENTS

I. INTRODUCTION AND ANALYTICAL FRAMEWORK ...................................... 2

II. HOW INTEREST SIMILARITY CONTRIBUTES PEACE ............................................... 6

A. The Definitions of Interests ....................... 8

B. The Theoretical Assumptions ..................... 13

1. States in a dyad with similar policy interests are less likely to have militarized disputes. .... 14

2. States in a dyad are less likely to have militarized disputes if they share similar security interests. ........................................ 16

3. States in a dyad are less likely to have militarized disputes if they share similar economic interests. ........................................ 17

III. ASSESSING THE VALIDITY OF DYADIC INTEREST SIMILARITY IN HISTORY ............ 17

A. The China-United States Dyad .................... 18

B. The Israel-Syria Dyad ............................ 23

IV. COMMON SECURITY INTERESTS BETWEEN CHINA AND TAIWAN ......................... 25

V. COMMON ECONOMIC INTERESTS BETWEEN CHINA AND TAIWAN .......................... 34

VI. THE RAPIDLY GROWING RESISTANCE AGAINST CHINA’S ECONOMIC COERCION IN TAIWAN AND THE 2014 SUNFLOWER STUDENT MOVEMENT ............................ 42

VII. CONCLUSION ....................................... 46

* Charles Chong-han Wu is Assistant Professor of Department of Government and International Relations at the Hong Kong Baptist University-United International College. His main research interests focus on international conflict, cross-Strait relations, East Asian politics, and Chinese foreign policy. Please send him an email at charleswu@uic.edu.hk if you have further questions.

(1)