Maryland Series in Contemporary Asian Studies
Number 1-2011 (204)
ISBN 1-932330-34-8, 63 pp., $15.00

LEGAL AID AND THE RULE OF LAW IN THE PEOPLE’S REPUBLIC OF CHINA

Mark Jia*

TABLE OF CONTENTS

I. INTRODUCTION ........................................................ 2
   The Literature .......................................................... 2
   Partial Legalization ................................................. 4
   Argument .............................................................. 6

II. CHINESE LAW AND LEGAL AID ..................... 7
    History of Chinese Law and Legal Aid ..................... 7
    Motivations .......................................................... 10
    The Regulatory Framework ..................................... 12
    Structures, Operations, and Finances ..................... 16

III. STRENGTHENING THE RULE OF LAW ........... 18
    Faith in the Legal System ..................................... 19
    Legal Education .................................................. 23
    Public Interest Legal Training ............................... 27
    Checks against Government and Business Excess ..... 29
    Fairer Treatment of Criminal Defendants .............. 32

IV. LIMITATIONS AND SETBACKS ....................... 35
    Limiting Factors .................................................. 35
    Responses ........................................................... 43
    Abuses of Legal Aid ............................................. 48

V. RECOMMENDATIONS ........................................ 50
   Constraints .......................................................... 50
   Current Approach ................................................ 52
   Policy Recommendations ....................................... 53
   Summary ............................................................. 60
   GLOSSARY .......................................................... 62

* Mark Jia is a graduate student in the Department of Politics and International Relations at Oxford University. He is an alumnus of Princeton University and the recipient of a Rhodes Scholarship. He wishes to acknowledge the support of the Woodrow Wilson School of Public and International Affairs, and to thank Lynn White for his generous advice.